New Zealand grieves as victims of Christchurch mosque terror attacks are identified

The attacks are the worst mass shooting in New Zealand's history.

Women weep as people gather by flowers laid near Al Noor Mosque on March 17, 2019, in Christchurch, New Zealand. Fifty people were confirmed dead, with 36 injured still in hospital following shooting attacks on two mosques in Christchurch on Friday, March 15. Forty-two of the victims were killed at Al Noor Mosque on Deans Avenue and seven died at Linwood Mosque. Another victim died later in Christchurch Hospital. A 28-year-old Australian-born man, Brenton Tarrant, appeared in Christchurch District Court on Saturday charged with murder. The attacks are the worst mass shooting in New Zealand's history. Read more on page 4.

2 Black boxes show similarities to Lion Air crash

Ethiopia said on Sunday the crash of an Ethiopian Airlines plane that killed 157 people had "clear similarities" with October's Lion Air crash, according to analysis of the black boxes recovered from the wreckage of the March 10 disaster. Both planes were Boeing 737 MAX 8s, and both crashed minutes after takeoff after pilots reported flight control problems. Concern over the plane's safety caused aviation authorities worldwide to ground the model, wiping billions of dollars off Boeing's market value. Investigators are trying to determine why the aircraft plunged into a field shortly after takeoff from Addis Ababa, searching for possible similarities to an October Lion Air crash that killed 189 people. "It was the same case with the Indonesian [Lion Air] one. There were clear similarities between the two crashes so far," Ethiopian transport ministry spokesman Muse Yiheyis said.

3 Blue Line shut down following Eastie casket inferno

MBTA officials say Blue Line service is still shut down due to Friday's massive fire in East Boston. Buses will shuttle outbound commuters between Airport and Wonderland Stations for the time being, while construction crews clean up damage and demolition debris from the 9-alarm fire, which began at the New England Casket Company on Bennington Street. Suffolk Downs Station outbound service is out of commission due to road closures. Flames quickly spread throughout the neighborhood, prompting evacuation orders for nearby residents as over 125 firefighters from Boston and Chelsea battled the fire for over seven hours as noxious fumes from hazardous chemicals billowed late into the night. Residents were allowed to return home after 10:30 p.m. on Friday once firefighters were able to subdue the inferno. NATE HOMAN

4 Gardner Museum heist's 19th anniversary Monday

Monday marks the anniversary of perhaps the greatest art heist in American history. On March 18, 1990, thieves dressed as cops broke into the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum and made off with 13 works of art valued at about $500 million. Authorities are still stumped. The museum is offering a reward of $10 million for information leading directly to the recovery of all 13 works in good condition. (A separate reward of $100,000 is being offered for the return of the Napoleonic eagle finial.) The pieces include "The Concert," one of only 34 known pieces by Johannes Vermeer. It is estimated to be the most valuable of the stolen art. Other paintings include "A Lady and Gentleman in Black" and "Christ in the Storm of the Sea of Galilee," by Rembrandt. "Christ in the Storm of the Sea of Galilee" is the only known seascape painting by Rembrandt. NATE HOMAN

Accounts emerge of heroism in New Zealand mosques; bodies to be released

Abdul Aziz was one of several heroes who tried stopping Brenton Tarrant.

REUTERS

Accounts emerged on Sunday of heroic attempts to tackle a gunman who slaughtered 50 people at two mosques in New Zealand, as authorities prepared to begin releasing the bodies of victims to their families for burial.

Australian Brenton Tarrant, 28, a suspected white supremacist, was charged with murder on Saturday. Tarrant was remanded without a plea and is due back in court on April 5, where police said he is likely to face more charges.

Friday's attack in the city of Christchurch, which Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern has labeled terrorism, was the worst-ever peacetime mass killing in New Zealand.

Ardern also said she wanted to talk to Facebook, as footage of the attack on one of the mosques was broadcast live on Facebook, and a "manifesto" denouncing immigrants as "invaders" was posted online via links to related social media accounts minutes before the violence began.

Amid the shock, outrage and recriminations that have consumed New Zealand over the past two days, tales of heroism and self-sacrifice emerged.

Abdul Aziz, 48, was hailed for confronting the shooter at the second mosque and preventing more deaths.

Aziz, originally from Afghanistan, ran outside after the shooting started and picked up a shotgun that the gunman had dropped. The gun had no shells in it, he said.

"I chased him," Aziz said. "He sat in his car and with the shotgun in my hands, I threw it through his window like an arrow. He just swore at me and took off."

Another man, Naeem Rashid from Pakistan, was seen on the gunman's video confronting the shooter before he was killed, the BBC reported. Rashid's 21-year-old son, Talha, was also killed.

The death toll climbed to 50 when police found another body at the Al Noor mosque, where more than 40 people died after a gunman burst in and opened fire on worshippers with a semi-automatic rifle with high-capacity magazines, driving to attack a second mosque.

Police rammed the suspect's vehicle and arrested him as he drove away from the second mosque in the suburb of Linwood.

Police Commissioner Mike Bush said the man was apprehended 36 minutes after police were alerted and he was the only person charged in connection with the shootings. Three people detained earlier were not involved, he said. REUTERS

Facebook pulls 1.5M videos

Facebook said it removed 1.5 million videos globally of the New Zealand mosque attack in the first 24 hours after the attack.

"In the first 24 hours we removed 1.5 million videos of the attack globally, of which over 1.2 million were blocked at upload," Facebook said in a tweet late Saturday.

The company said it is also removing all edited versions of the video that do not show graphic content out of respect for the people affected by the mosque shooting and the concerns of local authorities.

The death toll in the New Zealand mosque shootings rose to 50 on Sunday. New Zealand Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern has said she wants to discuss live-streaming with Facebook.

The changing views on CBD oil

We spoke with Joel Stanley of the company Charlotte's Web on why CBD should be the next big thing.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

The Stanley Brothers. PROVIDED

While some people like sugar and milk in their morning coffee, you may have noticed another option popping up at your local coffee shops that can ease you into your morning routine in a different way. Cannabidiol (CBD) is a non-intoxicating and low-THC-content supplement made from cannabis that is perfectly legal in small doses and has been exploding all over the country.

Possibly the brightest star among all of the newer CBD companies is the Colorado-based Charlotte's Web. Started by the seven Stanley brothers — Joel, Josh, Jesse, Jared, Jordan, Jon, and J Austin — the company gets its name from a young girl named Charlotte Figi. Using CBD, Figi, who had a unique form of epilepsy, went from having almost 300 seizures a week down to close to zero. The company has since become a global phenomenon worth $1.4 billion.

We spoke with brother Joel Stanley about working with his brothers and how the perception of CBD is changing.

What was your initial introduction to CBD?

This goes back to late 2008, when I first started reading about cannabis in general. My older brother, Josh, had started one of the first dispensaries — this was back when the controversy had first started to heat up. I didn't work in the industry at the time, I worked in the oil [industry] with my wife and kids, and I kind of laughed at what my older brother was doing. I didn't see any problem with it but I didn't see cannabis as a medical thing because most people didn't back then. When I started to read, I saw that there had been all of these studies, most of them not in the U.S., performed on various types of cannabis. That was the first time I saw the word cannabidiol. There were just a handful of research papers out there on it, but [they were] saying it shows a lot of promise.

That began to convert me to believe that this plant could be very helpful, and from there I jumped into the industry with my younger brother in early 2009. We had an interest in finding CBD.

Back then in the medical cannabis industry, there were just a handful of researchers who could pronounce the word "cannabidiol." It was just so rare. You know, they had spent all of these years of breeding up the levels of THC, and you can't breed up THC without losing the natural levels of CBD. It was just really low in concentration in almost every medical cannabis variety, so we began looking — we actually had to kind of go back to natural to find higher levels of CBD. Really, most of today's CBD genetics have come from wild hemp and sterile hemp.

We had begun seeking and breeding for a genetic [variety] that was specifically higher in CBD. The reason that we were doing that was because we had worked with so many folks who had benefited from medical cannabis, but didn't necessary like the high, the euphoric effect.

It's different for everybody. For some it's a pleasant experience and for others it can be a little more anxious and nervous [of an] experience. We were looking for CBD to help some clients at home who might not need that high level of THC.

What do you think is the last threshold to cross that will eliminate the stigma around using products derived from cannabis?

I think it's rapidly changing right now. From when I entered the industry to where it is now, there's a massive difference in how people are talking about it, and again it's because everyone has someone in their circle — or many people — who are benefiting from CBD. If those categories continue to expand, it's not going to get smaller.

You know, it's been impactful enough for individuals' lives that people are out there screaming on social media about how this is helping them, so I don't see this phenomenon going away.

I think the true barrier and threshold is when CBD and hemp and cannabis go under physician advocacy and that will happen when we have the data — and the research has just begun. But that's what's coming and once we have physician advocacy for states to recommend CBD or medical marijuana, when we have that data, that will be the last tipping point.

What was it like getting all of your brothers on the same page to start this business together? Was there some convincing over whether or not it was a good idea?

Well, you know, kudos to Josh my older brother for being the pioneer. I'll tell you a story that was my final straw — and I was probably the most difficult one to convince and probably the most conservative of my brothers, which isn't saying too much.

I was the only one with a kid at the time. I flew out to Denver to see Josh's dispensary and to spend some time with my brothers. We went to a John Prine concert. This had been my first day off in a very long time and I got to see their dispensary. I walked in and, as luck would have it, the first three people who come through the door after me are three cancer patients. Each of them had a different story in a different stage of cancer. Each one of them was going through an intense round of chemotherapy, had lost hair, and were people you could really feel for. And each one of them had the story that without their use of cannabis, they would not be eating and they wouldn't have survived the intense treatment. They wouldn't have been able to sustain their body without eating and sleeping. That sold me immediately.

Now, I can look at it and say, "Oh, in high school we called it the munchies." And I never thought of that as therapeutic. But I was like, oh, you have a wasting disorder, whether chemotherapy or something else. I can kind of see how that one simple positive side effect of cannabis can help so many people.

Since then, I've spoken with hundreds, if not thousands, of people who have had similar types of benefits, like the tens of thousands of people with Charlotte's condition whom this is working for. I was sold back then by those first three [patients], and I knew that I didn't really like the oil field per se, I didn't really like my job, and I knew I could get behind this. It's new. It's controversial. It certainly was risky, and when I called the rest of my brothers, I think they were already on the same page. They already had done a little bit of research, knowing that Josh had started a dispensary, so they were already on the same page. I didn't have to convince them that much — I think it was me that had to be convinced.

Sculpture to raise awareness about knife violence

"Knife Angel" monument

After being presented in 2017 and previously exhibited in Liverpool and Hull, the sculpture called "The Knife Angel" was installed at Coventry Cathedral, England. Created by British artist Alfie Bradley, the monument against violence with knives is 8 meters high. The criminal justice system in England and Wales dealt with 21,484 knife and offensive weapons offenses last year.

MWN

"'The Knife Angel' is a stark reminder of a form of violent crime infecting our city and threatening lives with great danger, especially our young people."

SPORTS

The Madness has arrived

Northeastern has a date with powerhouse Kansas on Thursday.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

Northeastern's Bolden Brace. GETTY IMAGES

March Madness is the most communal betting experience of the calendar year in the U.S. (sorry, Super Bowl squares) as you're annually attempting to take money from your Aunt Ginny and next-door neighbor Frank instead of a bookie or sportsbook. Now that sports betting is legal, however, you can do both.

The brackets were revealed early last night, and here are the top four seeds: Duke (East), Virginia (South), North Carolina (Midwest) and Gonzaga (West). That's three No. 1 seeds from the ACC if you're scoring at home. This immediately means that you should go looking for value teams from the ACC. Everyone agrees that the conference was LOADED this year.

Florida State looks like a great value team here as a four seed in the West Region. The ultra-athletic Seminoles have lost just twice in the past two months (at North Carolina and in the conference tourney against Duke … not much shame there).

Northeastern

The bad news: The Huskies drew Kansas.

The good news: The Huskies drew Kansas.

No. 13 Northeastern will take on No. 4 Kansas in the Midwest region on Thursday in Salt Lake City, Utah. Kansas is a traditional powerhouse in college basketball but it has gained a reputation over the years of coming up short in March.

Make no mistake, this is not the same Kansas team that went to the Final Four last season as the team lost leader Devonte Graham to graduation.

As for the Huskies, they have been playing fast in the month of March as in their last four games they're averaging 80.5 points per game. Averaging over 80 ppg in the college game is exceptional when you consider that the average college team this season topped out around 72 ppg.

Senior guard Vasa Pusica can spring for 20-plus points any time he steps on the floor and the Serbian guard has been hot lately — scoring over 20 points in six of his last 11 games.

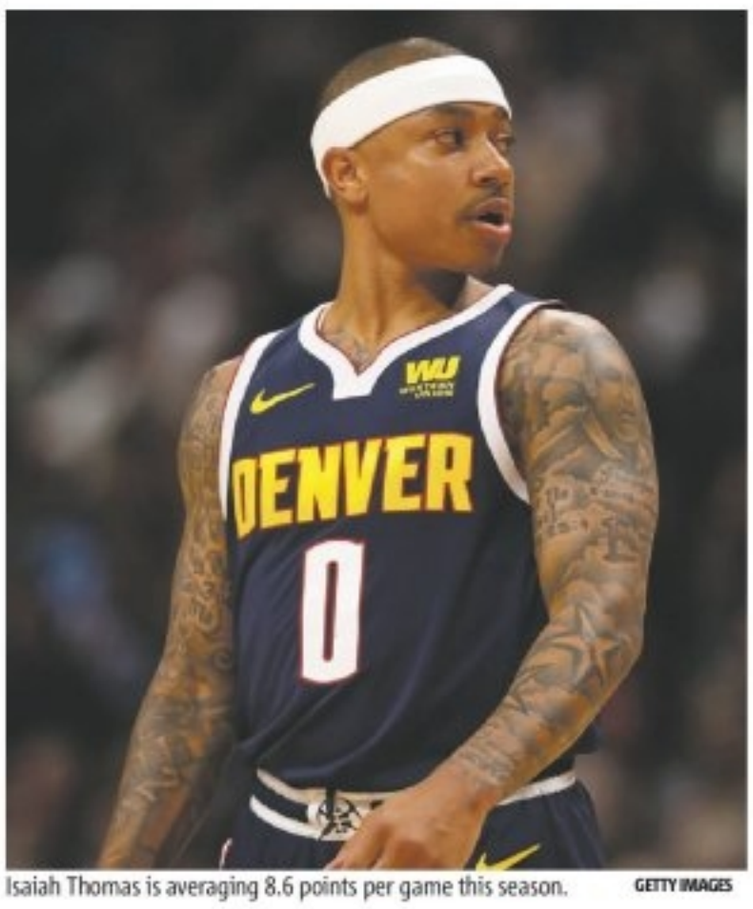
IT finally back in Boston

For the first time since May 19, 2017 — 668 days ago — Isaiah Thomas will likely play basketball on the TD Garden floor.

The beloved IT, who did not play in his lone appearance at the Garden last season due to rest following injury, will take the court as a member of the Denver Nuggets tonight in a battle against the Celtics (7:30 p.m., NBC Sports Boston).

Incredibly, the Nuggets are the third team Thomas has played for since being part of the blockbuster trade that landed Kyrie Irving in Boston. The Cavaliers shipped Thomas off to the Lakers last season as things got ugly in a hurry in Cleveland, and then "the little guy" signed with Denver this past offseason.

Thomas has been interacting heavily with Celtics fans on Twitter in recent days as he was asking where he could get a pickup game in Boston.



Isaiah Thomas is averaging 8.6 points per game this season. GETTY IMAGES

"Any open gyms this evening in Boston? I'll pull up if there is some good runs!" Thomas tweeted.

After responding to people asking him to show up at the BU rec center and Emerson College, Thomas' old friend Terry Rozier straight-up asked him to show at the Celtics practice facility for a one-on-one showdown.

"Let's get to it then," Thomas responded to Rozier. "I got some birthday Ls you can take lol."

Aries Learn all you can by interacting with interesting people. Someone quite unexpected will grab your attention and offer you something very tempting. Romance is on the rise.

Taurus Productivity is what counts. Refuse to let your emotions control the agenda or lead you into battle over trivial matters. Channel your energy into worthwhile projects and judicious compromises.

Gemini Concentrate on what's going on at home and any changes that you need to make pertaining to banking, bills or home improvements. Stay on top of personal matters.

Cancer Simple and subtle changes will bring you closer to your goals. Working alongside people you trust and enjoy being around will bring good results. Avoid emotional drama and excessive people.

Leo You can explore new possibilities without going overboard. A partnership will need to be monitored closely. Don't get angry when you can get busy and make the most of your time, effort and services.

Virgo Taking business trips, attending meetings and reuniting with people from your past will be enlightening. A positive change can be made if you pay attention.

Libra Associate with like-minded people to accomplish much and get an inside scoop regarding new possibilities. Don't let someone's negativity hold you back. Romance is in the stars.

Scorpio Participate in something that excites you. Learn from an expert and diversify your skills in order to keep up. Evolve with the times to avoid falling behind.

Sagittarius Put greater emphasis on managing your personal finances and investing in yourself instead of helping someone else get ahead. Don't be fooled by big talk or false information.

Capricorn Don't argue over trivial matters. Set guidelines when dealing with joint finances. Domestic expenses should be kept to a minimum. Plan strategically and move forward with precision.

Aquarius Work with the majority, not against it. If you disagree with someone, find a common-sense solution. Arguments will be to your detriment. Charm, kind gestures and incentives will pay off.

Pisces Don't take a chance if it could lead to ill health or injury. Use your intelligence when dealing with people who tend to be extravagant or indulgent. EUGENIA LAST
